

Adi Eyal

Founder of Code for South Africa, a civic technology organisation promoting usage of data in order to drive social change. He was part of the team that won the Vodacom journalist of the year award in the online category and is on a mission to challenge the South African media to be a global center of innovation. He advocates for more open data released by government and is creating a civic tech lab that incubates early stage civic technology start-ups. He is also founding member of the Open Data and Democracy initiative, an Open Knowledge ambassador and a co-coordinator of the Hacks/Hackers chapter in Cape Town.
